

A New Social Problem Projected Into The Far North Changing Eskimos To Ranchers

A new social problem has been projected into the far north with the government about to embark on the experiment of influencing the Eskimos to abandon to some extent his nomadic life and settle down to more or less of a communal existence. The agency that is being employed to achieve this is the reindeer. On the success of the venture which will shortly commence in the arrival of between 2,500 and 3,000 of these domesticated animals at Kluksuait, east of Mackenzie River delta, depends the development of the government's social scheme.

At the moment this huge herd is in Yukon territory, preparing for the last leg of the long trek which brought the animals from Kotzebue Peninsula, in Alaska, over the roof of the world. By the time the herd reaches Kluksuait four years and a half will have passed from November, 1929, when the Laplanders drew the herd, and his little group of herders undertook to transfer the reindeer to Canadian territory. For them they have been four years of hardship and privation, of disappointment and hope.

Beginning with 5,000 animals the herd has at times dwindled to around 2,000, wolves, blizzards and other hazards of the Arctic making inroads on the numbers. Each spring, however, the fawns have brought the numbers back, and utmost care has been taken to preserve the young. How many of the "originals" are left is impossible to say.

At Kluksuait the government has blocked off an area of approximately 5,500 square miles of territory. A number of Laplander families, brought to Canada by the government, are already with the animals and are all set to furnish the Eskimo instructions how to operate.

The great question is, how will the Eskimo's natural instinct is that of a hunter. He prefers to roam the great wastes of the northland seeking his food where he can get it, but entirely free from the restrictions of settlement life.

When the fur business is good, he is prosperous and satisfied; when it is bad, the depression weighs heavily on him. Whether he will abandon the untrammelled life he has and settle down to the assured but less free routine existence of raising reindeer is a problem, however.

The government proposes first to "catch" the young. In the mission schools of the northland are numerous Eskimo boys and girls who when being instructed in the rudiments of education and before whom are presented attractively the satisfactions of the settled life. It is intended to "apprentice" these youths to the herders, and so attempt to develop within the Eskimo a generation equipped with instruction less susceptible to the wanderlust.

A Puzzle To Chemists

Can Now Advance Theory As To How Soap Acts

Even chemists have been puzzled to know precisely how soap acts in removing dirt. It is generally considered that the efficacy of soap depends mainly upon its decomposition, when it is mixed with water, into an alkali and fatty acid. The alkali thus set free dissolves the grease by which the dirt is attached to the surface. It is then cleaned, and the water then carries off the dirt. But this is not all; the fatty acid from the soap neutralizes any free alkali remaining, thus preventing the loosening of the dirt and thus prevents the alkali from attacking the cleaned surface itself.

Inventor Of Air Brakes

Herbert Thacker Herr, 57, vice-president of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, Pittsburgh, is dead. Herr was the inventor of locomotive air brakes, and the inventor of improvements in turbines, oil and gas engines, and remote control for steam turbine such as are used in electrically propelled battleships.

A Home Made Product

California's Warm Winters Come From Pass Near San Bernardino

When the servants of an institution linked with study of the economic ray come down to earth, their findings in the lower altitudes may upset long-held terrestrial theory. For example, Irving P. Krick, meteorologist for the Guggenheim Laboratory of Aeronautics at California Institute of Technology, who has done much to modernize methods of weather forecasting for air travel, forecasts a laurel from the brow of the broad Pacific and bestows it upon a narrow, twelve-mile mountain passage, until now a stranger to fame, Cajun Pass, near San Bernardino, and not the Japanese current, according to his findings, reported in a paper written for a scientific publication, provides southern California with mild winters.

Whatever of disappointment or chagrin Californians may feel that their weather, instead of being a special-land importation from the Orient, is a home-made product, should be tempered by the fact that nature has located this newly discovered weather factory at their very feet.

A standard cord of well seasoned sugar maple, beech, or yellow birch will firewood weighs upwards of 4,000 pounds, whereas a similar cord of softwood may weigh less than 2,000.

The relative value of the different wood fuels may, therefore, be approximately compared on the basis of their weights, at the same moisture content. Two pounds of seasoned firwood are generally required to furnish the heat of one pound of anthracite coal or good grade coal, however is generally burned somewhat more efficiently, designed to heat a room with a pound of coal, a little more than two pounds of wood is required.

More specific information regarding the fuel value of different woods is obtainable from the Forest Products Laboratories, of the Department of the Interior, at Ottawa, Canada.

Had Time To Be Kind

One Of World's Busiest Sections Held Up Traffic To Rescue Bird

One need never be surprised at anything that happens in London. There is much human sorrow there, much inhuman to man in the struggle for existence. And yet the most crowded part of the metropolis during the day is the intersection in front of the Lord Mayor's Mansion House. It is one of the busiest traffic centers in the world. The other day there was a more prolonged hold-up than usual. Traffic was stopped in all directions. Accident? Somebody knocked down? No. Just a young stork in the middle of the road where ordinarily the least lines of autos, buses, horse-drawn vehicles and pedestrians made their way. The traffic stopped while several people endeavored to catch it. A bank clerk threw his derby hat over it and carried it to safety. Then the traffic moved on again.

When you are out on the highway and not in any hurry to get anywhere in particular, do you stop and pick a helpless fledgling off the concrete? Or do you just run over it, or leave it there for someone else to run over? If the traffic of the city of London could be stopped for one bird, you could afford to spare that amount of time, too. —St. Thomas Times-Journal.

Attraction Of The Earth

Pull Would Depend On Velocity Object Was Moving

It has been calculated that what is to be thrown from the earth with a velocity of five miles per second it would have the earth enter and become a satellite of the earth. If the velocity were increased beyond five miles per second the object would continue to revolve around the earth in an elliptical orbit where width would increase with the velocity until a velocity of seven miles a second was recorded, when the object would fly off on a parabolic curve, escaping the attraction of the earth and becoming a satellite of the sun.

With a population of only 900,000 Hong Kong, China, had a total of 3,000,000 arrivals and departures in the last year.

Evidence Shows Napoleon Once Planned To Invade Canada By Way Of Pacific Ocean

Wheat Situation Improves

Shipment From Canada May Be Permitted To Exceed The Quota

The United States government hardly more than ample for their own needs, there is at least a reasonable probability shipments of wheat from Canada this season will be permitted to exceed the 200,000,000 bushels allowed under the wheat agreement, says a review of the wheat situation published by the Royal Bank of Canada accompanying its monthly letter.

If the Canadian exports only come up to the quota, the carryover at the end of next July would be reduced to 63,000,000 bushels from the 212,000,000 bushels carryover from last year's crop.

"In spite of the small wheat crop in 1929," says the review, "inched in wheat prices have remained considerably below the average of 63 cents gold per bushel fixed by the wheat pact. The minimum which must be attained before tariff reductions will be initiated.

"Yet wheat supplies are not sufficient that some experts are beginning to anticipate world wheat shipments in excess of the basis used in fixing the quotas."

Although early in the season crop prospects were excellent and a large acreage had been sown to wheat, the crop was severely injured by drought and the yield amounted to only 233,000,000 bushels, the review declares in quoting recent official estimates. The total crop for the whole Dominion is placed at 271,000,000 bushels.

Wheat areas in the United States suffered even more severely from drought than those in Canada with the result that in North America the 1929 crop was 260,000,000 bushels less than the year before and 500,000,000 bushels less than the five-year average.

In Europe the total area sown to wheat showed little change from 1922 and conditions were generally favorable. The Russian situation, the review proceeds, "is, as usual, obscure." But the quality of Russian grain is reported to be "very poor." The first official Argentine estimate is 256,000,000 bushels, up 20,000,000 bushels from the previous year. The Australian crop is cut sharply as drought was general.

One Of Popular Relics

Fairy Flag Valued By Owner Of Dunvegan Castle

Probably of all the relics of Dunvegan Castle, Scotland, the most popular is the fairy flag of the Macleods, even more than a valiant sword by Prince "Charles," and some of his hair in a locket. Tradition says the flag was the gift of a fairy to Macleod chief wedded and then deserted. It caused victory in battle for the clan and lured fish in shoals for the fisherfolk of Dunvegan. The flag can be waved only three times for service to its owners. Twice it has rendered help in dire need, and will do so once again. Then the fairy will split it away—also Dunvegan's owner.

Three century-old books lie in a showcase in the Dominion archives at Ottawa—mute evidence that Napoleon once gave serious thought to an invasion of what is now Canada, by way of the Pacific. They are French translations of Alexander Mackenzie's voyages to the Pacific, bearing the imperial stamp of Napoleon and dated 1802. They open a little-known chapter of the life of the Little Corporal, untouched by historians.

Napoleon in that year was approaching the zenith of his power as first consul of republican France, later to be emperor and conqueror of most of Europe before collapse and banishment to St. Helena. But one nation, England, stood out against him, harried him, at every turn and produced in him not only hatred but a deep-seated desire to cripple, maim and, if possible, conquer.

Napoleon searched in every direction for vulnerable spots in England's armor, and at last conceived the idea of invading British North America from the Pacific or the Mississippi to distract her attention from Europe. He ordered French translations of standard works on the country, its people, climate and topography.

General Bernadotte, later to be king of Sweden, was instructed to collect the books and, if possible, to use smugglers to break the blockade between France and England.

Among the smuggled volumes was an account of Alexander Mackenzie's voyages to the Pacific in 1789 and 1793, published in London in 1801. Mackenzie was the first white man to cross North America north of Mexico.

Careful study of Napoleon and Bernadotte convinced them of the feasibility of the Pacific entrance to the continent. For some weeks Napoleon toyed with the idea of using Louisiana as his base. Eventually he dropped the whole scheme as impractical—and that was the beginning of the end.

The three books were placed in Napoleon's library and when he was banished to St. Helena in 1815 they were taken along. After his death in 1821 they found their way into the possession of Mrs. Bernard Head, of Montreal. The last record of descent of Mackenzie, upon his death several months ago, the books were given to the Canadian archives.

Curse Of King Tut

Authority On Antiquities Of Egypt Dies After Long Illness

Arthur Edward Pease Bruce Pease, a leading authority on the antiquities of Egypt, died in London recently after a long illness. He was 55 years old.

Pease, on a position as the Egyptian government's inspector-general of antiquities in 1914, and devoted himself to travel and writing. He was the author of "The Curse of the Pharaohs," a book which was foreworded for violators of that ancient Egyptian king's tomb, was recalled with the death of Mr. Pease, for he was present when King Tut's tomb was opened.

Friends said there was something mysterious about his illness the cause of which could not be traced, and that it was "extraordinary" that he should have died so young.

In connection with several previous deaths there was talk of the curse. The Earl of Carnarvon, head of the archaeological expedition which discovered the tomb, died in April, 1923, shortly after the exhumation.

Woodford, son of a British race horse owner, died in London in November, 1925, a few months after he visited the valley of kings. He was en route to the Egyptian tombs at the time of his death.

Last September friends of J. P. Morgan, the millionaire financier and scientist, wondered when he lost the use of his left eye as a result of ultra-violet ray tests on an mummy at the ancient Egyptian funeral chamber.

Mr. T. F. McFadden was in Calgary for a couple of days last week.

Mrs. Chalmers and daughter, Margaret, spent the week end at the home of Mrs. and Mrs. L. Poxon.

In our last issue we stated that Dr. McFadden had left for the East. We wish to correct this statement. Dr. McFadden did receive word of the seriousness of his father and at the last minute decided that there was little hope of his reaching his father in time and so remained to look after his estate.

For the past ten days and farmers are welcoming the change. When trials are up and grain is beginning to move from the country points to local markets. Many roads, however, are still blocked for heavy traffic.
